To Whom It May Concern,

I am writing to highly recommend Dr. Ellen Cecil-Lemkin for the Teaching Professor position. I had the privilege of being a student in her ENGL 236: Disability and Writing course during the Fall 2023 semester; and I can strongly attest to her teaching abilities and dedication to student's success.

My favorite aspect of Dr. Cecil-Lemkin's instruction was her ability to facilitate a collaborative environment for all her students; she has an unwavering commitment to ensuring that every single student has the support and resources they need to thrive. From the beginning of the course, she created a welcoming environment where students could openly discuss what they need to reach their full potential. Her attention to detail regarding her student's different needs and forms of participation is one of her biggest strengths as a professor. This approach to accessibility set the tone for a collaborative and supportive classroom throughout the semester.

As a student, I felt very supported by Dr. Cecil-Lemkin because she would quickly respond to students if they had any questions or concerns about the content. I would typically speak to her after class about the materials we learned in class and how the discussion went. She was very supportive of my learning and encouraged me to investigate my questions further through personal research. It was also very clear that she was extremely enthusiastic about the content that she was teaching because she made sure that each student connected the readings to their life and experiences instead of simply summarizing the readings.

As a person, I admire Dr. Cecil-Lemkin because she has always been supportive of my goals and her class gave me the space to reflect on how disability impacted my life as well as others. During her class, I had the space to do my research on topics that I was interested in, and I had significant amounts of collaboration with other students. Her class was the first time I participated in collaborative writing, and I got a closer look at how collaboration occurs in the academic sphere. After class was over, she continued to support me by writing letters of recommendation for different programs I was applying for, and it felt like I had a genuine connection with her. I believe that Dr. Cecil-Lemkin will be an amazing Teaching Professor and there is no one else that I would more strongly recommend.

Thank you for your time,

Sierra Fox
